

The continued dry weather has lowered the rivers and lakes terribly and in some places you can walk across the Sheyenne river without getting your feet very wet. Lake Willow is very low. At Fargo the Red river is so low that the people of that city fear that the water supply will give out which would be a great calamity as the city has to depend on the river for its water supply.