

What came near being a bad accident happened yesterday about noon down by the slaughter house when Louis Trostad and Candidate S. J. Tande came along in the formers' auto and were about to cross the track. No. 3 came along at a terrific gait and the two men claim it never whistled or anything, the first they knew of the train was when it was right upon them—just a few seconds would have meant death to the two in the auto. The engine tore off one of the front fenders and smashed the wheel on the auto, but the occupants were not hurt in the least and were perfectly satisfied the way things went after all.—Aneta Panorama.

If a Great Northern train cant knock Tande off the track it is no use of the democratic candidate trying to do so.
