

Mail Carrier Clarence McCulloch has the right idea of equipping himself for carrying the mail. He has a very substantial enclosed rig in which he has placed a little coal stove and when he gets inside his cab and closes the door he is about as warm as when he is at home sitting beside his fireside. It is the proper way to fit out for that kind of work and when mail carriers do this and give their horses the proper attention and care they should have the job of carrying mail most of the time in this climate will not be so bad.
