

It is not very often that we have an elopement in this neck of the woods but we were treated to one last Monday when Lyman Lewis and Miss Flora Bowe skipped out on the afternoon train. We are informed that they were headed for Valley City where we hope for the good of the girl that they were married. Mr. Lewis is a grandfather while the would-be bride is only a young woman about twenty. These people have a right to get married and it is probably none of our business, at the same time we cannot refrain from quoting Puck: "What fools ye mortals be."
