

Last Saturday was the forty-third anniversary of the marriage of Rev. O. D. and Mrs. Purinton but they had been married for so many years without anything very unusual happening they did not attach much importance to the day and went to bed rather early. The good neighbors, however, got wind of the anniversary somehow and decided to make it more than a matter of passing comment. About twenty of them got together a nice collection of eatables and stormed the Purinton residence late in the evening, getting the worthy pastor and his bride of forty-three years out of bed in a hurry and invited them to eat of the good things provided by the ladies. They accepted the invitation most cheerfully and for a while a nice, social time was enjoyed. Before leaving many souvenirs were left Mr. and Mrs. Purinton as mementoes of this notable event.
