

up for the accommodation of the public.

The citizens of Walum were not a little surprised Monday, April 3, when J. E. Johnson, partner in the new lumber firm here, stepped off the train, accompanied by a young lady. Certain indications made us strongly suspect that Johnson was married. During the afternoon our suspicion was verified, and that evening the boys organized and equipped themselves for a charivari. The band marched but once around the house when Mr. Johnson appeared at the door and flung it wide open, and with a smile invited the crowd in. When inside all were liberally treated. When leaving all felt ready to give three hearty cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Johnson.