

The old town cistern near the Crane residence caved in the other evening while some of the girls of the neighborhood were playing on top of it, and May Johnson went down with the dirt eight feet below the surface. Maynard Crane was near and got her out, very much scared but not hurt. The cistern had been filled up some time ago but not full enough and the earth had sunken away. It gave the girls a great fright. The city has had the cistern filled up so that hole won't bother any more.