

Carrier Gardner started out on his mail route last Friday in the face of that storm and when out of town a few miles his horse put up a protest against going further, kicked a few holes in the atmosphere and lit out, leaving Angus and his cart up against a fence post. The horse was captured at Niernberg's, a cart borrowed, and Angus returned to town. That horse won't feel so lively after he has made that thirty-one miles daily for a couple of months.
