

C. A. Hall and J. A. McCulloch fell from the roof of A. Rhodes' building last Friday afternoon dropping ten feet to the ground. Mr. Hall escaped with a few scratches but Mr. McCulloch received painful injury to his left shoulder and arm. A couple of small bones—collar bones we believe, were cracked. It was a wonder that both of them were not badly hurt. The scantling on the roof gave way and they shot down that slippery tin roof with the throttle wide open on high speed and struck the ground hard.
