—The banquet, ball and social, given by the Masonic and Odd Fellows lodges of this place, was the most successful event which has ever taken place in our town. About 250 guests partook of the elegant repast, and about 150 of these guests participated in the dance, and everyone expressed themselves as enjoying one of the most pleasant evening's of their life. Everything went off pleasantly and happily, and—but further words to express it fail us, as we were present and up all night enjoying it and therefore our vocabulary of words fitting for the occasion is not particularly bright and scintillating this morning—suffice it to say that large numbers of the guests participated in the dreamy mazes of the dance until day dawned this morning. The lodges could, no doubt, draw as large if not a larger crowd should they feel inclined to ever give another like evening of enjoyment, for their fame as entertainers has now gone abroad.
