

"Tideledy-Winks.

The Fargo Republican thus explains the new game of "ideledy-winks" which is the popular craze in society just now:

"The inspiration for this game came through the revival a few months ago of an ancient English game known as "tideledy winks," which has created almost as great a furor as the pig-in-clover or 13-14 15 puzzles did in their day. "Tideledy-winks" is simplicity itself. In fact it is so very easy that one of the greatest houses in the trade, to whom the idea was first submitted a year ago by a clever employe, declined to handle it because they did not believe the public would take to such an absurdly simple thing. The paraphernalia consists of two dozen or more different colored bone chips, of the size and shape of an ordinary copper cent; a half doz. large chips, like those used in poker; a cup of bone, wood or glass, as large as a medium sized egg glass, and a woolen mat, or better still, a heavy table cover. The little chips are divided among any number of players up to six, and the scheme is to jump them into the cup or "wink pot," as it is known, by laying them flat on the mat or table cover and then dressing their edges with the larger disk."
