

Word comes from West Superior that the body of Burnett Sherwood, formerly in the saloon business in this place with his brother was found floating in the lake under circumstances which point to suicide, a week or two ago. We remember Burnett with the kindest feelings, and noticed his gradual sinking under the spell of King Alcohol with sorrow. No one realized his danger better than himself, but he was unable or for some reason disinclined to throw off the yoke. His was an extremely sensitive nature and independent to a degree. Liberal beyond his means, he often found himself "broke." Loyal to his friends large-hearted, he was never too poor to share with those more needy than himself. Peace to his ashes.
