

A clerk in the employ of More Brothers at Wimbledon had quite an experience trying to get married the first of the week. He secured his license at Valley City and when it arrived there was a mistake in it which made it necessary to return it for correction. He had intended going to Valley City to have the ceremony performed but missed the train and then decided he would have the job done in Courtenay. The license was coming by express in the evening and before the train arrived from the east he had engaged Justice Bouer, the judge supposing that the license was coming from Jamestown. After the train arrived the couple appeared before the judge and produced the license but when they were informed that the ceremony would have to be performed in Barnes county the groom said he would have to be shown and if the judge would not do the job he could get the minister. So immediately they hied themselves to the residence of the parson and got him out of bed only to be informed that if the judge could not tie the knot it would be impossible for him to do it either. The girl in the case is Miss Ellefson, a daughter of Mrs. Ed McCormick, and it is supposed they finally went into Barnes county and were married.
