

Albert Kokott at his farm northeast of Jamestown has two pair of peacocks which attract the attention of passers-by by their renowned beauty of plumage. The bird is a native of Ceylon and history and the bible (1 Kings X 22; 2 Chron. IX 21) speak of it many times, usually as an example of pride but also as very fine for table. Mr. Kokott's specimens are fine ones, and there will be some little ones hatched out soon which will be of added interest to the curious.—Alert.
