

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Reid departed the first of the week for Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, where they will make their future home. Mr. Reid took with him two cars of fancy blooded stock which he raised on his farm here, consisting of shorthorn cattle and Hambletonian horses. When he first came to this section he was convinced that it ought to be a good stock country on account of the abundance of rich, nutritious grasses and he began in a small way to raise Shorthorn cattle and Hambletonian horses. He kept adding to his stock until he had one of the finest herds in the state with quite a few registered Shorthorns and his horses of the best Hambletonian stock and travelers of rare appearance and fine action. Mr. and Mrs. Reid were pioneers in this section of the country, being among the first to brave the hardships incident to life in a new country but they have been richly rewarded for their labors and are now able to enjoy all the comforts of life and feel that every cent of their possessions has been earned honestly. They now have a fine home in Virginia and with their love of nature will be able to drink in all the beauties of the sunny south.
