Marion Conklin had an exciting race with train 106 last Friday evening when about to return to his home at Jamestown. He happened to be a little late in arriving at the depot and the train had started when he reached the platform, getting there barely in time to catch the last coach. Being encumbered with a heavy traveling bag, and not being of small dimensions, Mr. Conklin had all he could do to hang on to the grip and keep his hold on the hand rail of the coach, but was soon aided in his endeavors by a timely boost from Ed. Deverell which placed him safely aboard.
