

An accident happened to Frank Gurski last Saturday that might have caused instant death and it is miraculous that he escaped with his life. While being engaged in raising a dwelling house on the farm of Martin Falk for building a stone foundation he reached under the building to adjust pieces of blocking, in some unknown manner the house slipped from the jack-screws and props and he was pinned underneath the floor, the sills striking his back and compressing his chest. After a hard effort the building was again raised sufficiently to permit him to be liberated from the precarious position. A doctor was summoned and after a careful examination found that no bones were broken and though he will be confined to his bed for some time his recovery is looked for. The building evidently caught on some obstruction, keeping the whole weight from falling on him or he would have been crushed to pulp.
