

Dog Did Not Like Iowa

Gaunt and thin and apparently half starved, a Scotch collie dog that left for Iowa with the family of J. W. Schmickle, returned to his former home near Cogswell about two weeks ago, after an absence of nearly two months. The dog had been raised on the farm and had scarcely been off the place when the family moved to Iowa after selling their farm chattels this fall, taking the dog with them. Whether the dog went to Iowa with the family, or whether he was lost on the way is not known, but it is clearly apparent he has been on a long hunt for his old home and has suffered many hardships on his journey. Robt. Karr, who is living on the farm this winter, has taken the dog in, and he seems perfectly contented now that he has found his old home.
