

What might have been a serious accident happened to Mrs. H. N. Tucker and children, while out riding in a buggy last Saturday. In crossing the railroad track on Fourth Avenue to the north the little shetland ponies became frightened from an approaching freight train and taking the bits between their mouths undertook to run away regardless of the strenuous efforts on the part of Mrs. Tucker to keep them in check. In rounding the corner of Mrs. Horn's residence they made a too sudden turn and upset the buggy, throwing the occupants on the hard street. Outside of a severe jar and slight bruises no serious injury resulted to the occupants. The ponies started east demolishing the buggy to splinters but they were soon stopped by Harry Mowder who soon got them under control.
