

A drink from the wrong bottle caused C. A. Edwards considerable suffering for a day or two this week. He has been taking Paine's Celery Compound lately and had finished one bottle. Mrs. Edwards had the bottle filled with ammonia, putting a label over the Compound label, and set it near where the medicine had been standing. Mr. Edwards mistook it for a new bottle of the Compound and without examining it took a mouthful. He did not swallow it but his mouth and throat were badly burned and he was unable to eat anything for a couple of days. Had he swallowed the ammonia it would probably have resulted fatally.
