

R. C. Lovelace received a telegram on Monday informing him that his house on his claim near Velva had been destroyed by the wind on Sunday. He learned later that the house was made into kindling wood in the course of a few minutes and the furniture was badly damaged. Mrs. Lovelace had been occupying the house until the Fourth of July when she came here to spend a few weeks with Mr. Lovelace and most of their furniture was in the house at the time it was destroyed. It is fortunate that Mrs. Lovelace was not there when the accident happened.
