

A Narrow Escape

One of John Sloan's little boys had a narrow escape from being killed Saturday of last week. He was driving a team hitched to a disc and in some manner was thrown in front of the machine and one of his legs was caught by a disc, but the team stopped at his command and he called for help. Anton Fried happened along the road a short distance from where the boy was and hearing the child's crys went to his relief. Aside from being bruised on one leg the boy was able to continue with his work.—Wimbleton News.
