John S. Olson and a couple of other railroad boys, while coming into town on the hand car the other evening, challenged Mr. Zimmerman, who was driving into town, to a race. It so happened also that the trainmen were working on the Y and had left the switch open and as the boys came pounding along at a 60 mile an hour gait, the hand car refused to run up two tracks at one time and the consequences were that the hand car jumped from the track and Johnny and the other boys kept on going for about twenty feet. Fortunately no one was injured and as the party who left the switch open was not present the excellent "cussing" he got won't result disastrously.
