

Tom Troulson's little boy tells his father that he slept in the road till his hands got cold and that he would keep on till he found the old lady at Thompson's or some one that he knew. The boy says that an animal with straight ears took hold of his pants at the hip and then at the shoulder and then he kicked it and it went away.