Herman Hammer met with a painful accident last Saturday night. He was driving his trotting horse around the race track when one of the lines got under the horse's tail. He snatched the line from under the horse's tail and hit the animal a slap with the lines. This made the horse mad and he kicked Hammer in the face knocking him from the cart and inflicting an ugly flesh wound, but no bones were broken. The horse made a lively run through town and in and out among the buildings, but luckily no one was hurt and the cart escaped with one wheel smashed.
