The latest suspicion is that he knew Northern Pacific was to advance and any report of consolidation would carry Great Northern upwards with it.

ful deliverence from a frightful death.

In telling of it he says; "I was taken with Typhoid fever, that ran into pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me, I expected to soon die of consumption, when I hear of 'Dr. King's New Discovery. One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and strong, I can't say too much in its praise." ## OBITUARY.

Entered into rest on the night of November 16, 1900, at Riverside, California, Lina Barnard Andrus, wife of Byron Andrus, fornerly of Cooperstown, N. D. Mrs. Andrus was the oldest daughter of the late Geo. W. Barnard, who was well known to the citizens of this place.

Possessed of much more than ordinary mental equipment, Mrs.

Andrus devoted all her gifts after marriage to Mr. Andrus, to the work of home making and motherhood. To us who knew her well, was given a rare vision of fortitude, as we watched the frail woman, during the years of her wedded life, keeping death at bay with one hand while with the other she smilingly ministered to her husband, her three little daughters and her many friends. With an inheritance of pulmonary weakness which began somewhat alarming developments several years ago, she and her friends had feared that some day she would become a victim of consumption. But their fears took on new shape when, two years since, there appeared signs that she had been seized by a malidy to which, by comparison, death from consumption is a thing greatly to be desired. Through all these two years of suffering and weakness, with a certain and dreadful death staring her in the face, she has gone about her daily duties so patiently, and with such cheerfulness that only a very few people knew anything about the way down which her

No effort was spared not only to arrest the progress of the disease, but to lessen her suffering as much as possible, and her husband, her relatives and her friends may well find comfort in that thought. An unusual spiritual uplifting came to her in the later months of her life, and she "fell on sleep" feeling sure that she would be gently led through green pastures and by still waters to peace and rest. Her friends, to whom she was unusually and unfailingly loyal, would not call her back from her new home. But the world is a much poorer place to us, now that she is gone from it.

E. H. K.
