

COLGATE.

The seeding of wheat is about finished in this neighborhood, and the acreage is said to be considerably larger than for former years. There will be about the usual amount of Oats, Barley, Millet, etc., sown.

The great fall of rain which we have just had is having the effect to make the "honest farmer" smile while he contemplates the abundant harvest which awaits him in the near future, and his otherwise serene mind is only agitated now over the probable cost of binding twine, of which he now plainly sees he will need an enormous amount.

George W. King, Esq., has taken 297 of the Mears sheep to herd and shear, which will add considerably to the wool clip to be shipped from this point.

O. H. Williams is looking around for some responsible herder, with whom to leave his colts and young cattle.

The schools of Colgate and Rochester are open this week, with Miss King as teacher at Colgate, and Miss Hervey as teacher at Rochester.

George Gray is seeding the Jefferson farm (S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  26, 144, 55) on shares.

Complaints have been lodged with the town clerk, alleging that the dead carcasses of not less than six horses and cattle are left scattered over the surface of our beautiful town, to petrify and breed sickness and death among our inhabitants. The owners or occupants of land should see to it that their premises are rid of these carcasses, and save themselves of the annoyance and cost of prosecution. Our laws are very plain as to the duty of owners and others in regard to the proper disposition to be made of these carcasses, and are also very severe in meting out punishment for neglecting to take care of the same; and especially the carcasses of glandered horses and other diseased animals, from the festering remains of which animals not only of the neighborhood, but the inhabitants themselves, are liable to inoculation and death.

County Attorney Murray has been circulating through the town this week, in the interests of the business of his office.
