

Mike Nybo and family, who live a few miles west of Hope, had a narrow escape from asphyxiation Friday night last. On going to bed the drafts in the stove were shut off. Some time in the night Nybo awoke deathly sick and attempted to reach the door, but fell on the floor unconscious, in which condition he remained till Saturday afternoon. His wife and her mother were also unconscious. Fortunately the fire went out and the gas escaped from the house. It was a pretty close call.
