—The pioneer settlers along the Shyenne say the water has never been so low in the river before since the country was settled as it is this winter. In some places, at the rapids, there is not a bit of water running. One of the boys cut through the ice the other day, then dug a hole in the sand and gravel more than the depth of his pail. When he got back with his team the water did not run in as fast as he wanted to dip it out to water his team. It is conceded by all parties acquainted with the circumstances, that there will probably be hardly a live fish in the river next spring.
