—Mr. J. M. Stewart, on both business and pleasure combined, made a trip to Casselton last Tuesday, returning yesterday. But he came very near not getting back so soon, as the minions of the law were after him, because his physiognomy and general bearing tallied somewhat with the description of a very clever "gentleman" who was wanted in Michigan for handling to freely other people's money, while acting as bank cashier. Joe at last convinced the arm of the law that he was not the man whom he was after, and was allowed to come on home. For particulars, ask Joe.
