

Hiccass are very plentiful in some portions of the country adjacent to Wimbledon. Some of our town boys gathered over two bushels Sunday. As they sell very readily for $3.50 per bushel, a number of our citizens have been rushing after them this week. They are generally ripe about the first of August, but this year they seemed to mature much earlier. The cultivation of hiccass would be a splendid industry for North Dakota farmers to engage in.