

---

Saturday morning M. Mograd of Revere lost his fine new barn by fire, presumably from matches used by some transient who had slept there the night before. This barn was very large and was modern in most every way, having waterworks with individual drinking cups for cows, a slushing system for removing manure, etc. It was filled up with feed for the winter, but building and contents were fully covered by insurance.