

Even an unassuming kitten knows when it is time for its owner to go home, especially when it is shut in a shivery automobile, all by its lonesome. Thursday, John Christianson picked up a stray kitten in town and put in his car, intending to take it home. A short time later, while talking with friends, his auto horn blew lustily. An investigation revealed the cat perched on the steering wheel evidently too frightened to make any further moves.