

Recently, John Davidson was the recipient of several marks of honor from the French government, one being a certificate of citation and another being a decoration called by the French a Forriere, an arrangement of braids to be worn on his coat. These were sent to him in recognition of special acts of bravery in two major engagements of the war.