

Last week George Kolpin had the misfortune to lose fifteen head of young cattle from which he had removed the horns. For some reason the flow of blood could not be checked and in a short time the animals commenced dying from sheer loss of blood. Ten others which he dehorned survived the ordeal, although their loss of blood was considerable. Mr. Kolpin does not know any reason for the loss of blood unless it could be due to a thin consistency from feeding alfalfa hay.
