

H. S. Taylor is nursing a broken arm as a result of an encounter with a balky Ford. Monday night, after lodge, he attempted to crank J. S. Byington's car which the young folks had been having trouble in starting, and the engine backfired, breaking both bones just above the wrist. Dr. Lewis set the arm immediately, and Hilt will be a gentleman of enforced leisure only so long as nature can perform its work. Tuesday he went to Cooperstown and had an X-Ray of the injury taken. Everything was found to be entirely satisfactory.
