

Odin Willey had a mishap Monday, while riding to town on horseback. He was on the road that parallels the track and when near town the horse fell and pinned him under it. Parties from a distance saw them fall, and observing that they did not get up, they telephoned to town and had men go to his assistance. The snow had melted to such an extent that when the animal fell it sank in the snow so deep that it could not get up until assisted by the men.
