

THRESHING MACHINE FATAL ACCIDENTS.

Bert Seaton, a teamster on the Buchanan farm north of Jamestown met with a horrible fate on Tuesday forenoon.

The threshing machine with which he was working had become chocked up and the man attempted to get on the machine but missed his footing and slid into the cylinder of the separator. He was dragged for some distance into the machine and his lower limbs were dreadfully mangled. He lived but two minutes after the accident happened and his last words were:

"I am killed. Send news to my mother at Portland, Mich."

When Seaton went to stop on the separator a teamster on the opposite side told him to "hold on" but he did not hear the warning.

The authorities at Portland have been notified and will endeavor to locate the mother of the unfortunate young man.

The affair happened so quickly that the spectators could do nothing.
