

Mrs. Henry Shure, whose husband is proprietor of a hotel at Page, was so badly burned by an explosion of gasoline that death resulted. She was cleaning a stove with gasoline when someone entered the room and stepped on a match which ignited and caused the explosion. Her son was seriously, perhaps fatally, burned while attempting to rescue her. The young gentleman will be remembered by our citizens as he was in Wimbledon a few weeks ago, looking over the town and expected to open a law office.
