Some of the papers around the state seem to feel like Hanna will have easy sailing this fall when he and Hellstrom, the democratic nominee, battle for the governor's chair. Hellstrom's majority over his opponent, Jones, was so small that it shows him up as rather weak and from the present indications the democrats will have to give up the chair, which they have succeeded in keeping one of their men in for the past three terms. But from the democratic standpoint it will be an easy victory for their nominee, they claiming that a number of the Buchanan followers will desert the republican ranks and line up with the democrats in order to defeat Hanna. It is an acknowledged fact that the democrats have elected their governor by the help of republicans for three straight terms; men who were dissatisfied with the republican nominee, and should the Buchanan supporters turn towards the aid of Hellstrom, the democrats will continue in power. Such state of affairs are only hearsay, and may prove quite different by the time the voters are called upon to choose between the two men.

Teddy seems to be determined to have a party of his own and has snared some of the Taft and Lafollette enemies to help him in his efforts. They are progressing slowly.
