

Met With Accident

John Neva had a very close call from death Monday evening, by his auto being turned over. Mr. Neva was driving on the main road near Peter Rudolph, a road he has been over many times, and was unfortunate enough to hit a rock, which was allowed to stay near the road, and in so doing bent the axel of the car to such an extent that it became unmanageable and quickly ran onto other large rocks at the roadside and toppled over, completely demolishing the car from further service.

The car is said to be a fit subject for the scrap pile. Mr. Neva will bring suit against the township for their carelessness in allowing such rocks to be near the road, which are said to be immense ones, and one driving along there at night could not see them until a car became right onto them. It is very careless to allow large rocks to remain on the highway, and Mr. Neva will find out whether the township has a right to neglect the highways. He is able to be about, although very much shaken up.
