POETRY IN RUSHING WATERS

Voice and Appearance of "Mighty Thunderer" Brought to One's Senses by Graphic Description.

But of a sudden the sun bursts forth in all the glory of a summer afternoon and the whole aspect of the scene is changed. Gloom and despair are overridden by a boundless joy, the all-dispelling joy of nature. True, the waters still hurl themselves headlong to the awful depths below; true, the terrible chasm yawns for its lawful prey; true, the voice of the "Mighty Thunderer" still echoes from the untold depths. But those waters seem now to scintillate with a thousand crystals, to reflect strange colors and weird phantom shapes—to dance with a new-born impetus; that chasm seems to yawn less terribly; the voice of the "Mighty Thunderer" to speak with a cadence strikingly musical, and as the mist created by the fall rises snowlike to the sky, a veritable burst offering, crowning the "Mighty Thunderer" with a glorious double rainbow, emblematic of victory and peace, the waters themselves glide off down the river, clear as crystal, yet verdant as the meadowland, smooth as glass, yet turbulent as the mighty torrent that impels them—glide off down the river in the besetting peacefulness that marks the period of calm that precedes the storm—off down the narrowing gorge to be lost in the vortex of the rapids.—Garnaut Agassiz, in the National Magazine.

MEANINGS CHANGED BY TIME

Study of Word Building Through Centuries Brings Out Many Most Interesting Points.

Word building is as much a piece of carpentry as is house building. Only it takes longer. Sometimes a century or more. And by that time the word's first-meaning is usually changed. For example, the old word for "neighbor" was "sib." One's good neighbor was known as one's "good sib." This became shortened to "god-sib," and later to "gossip." Then the word's whole meaning changed and gossip no longer meant good neighbor, but applied to the sort of talk exchanged between good neighbors. "Take the word 'farmer,' too. The old word for 'farmer' was 'boor.' (And 'boor' later was used for describing farmer-like or rough persons.) The farmer living nearest to one was known as the "neighbor," and this phrase, in course of time, was twisted to "neighbor." You've heard the proverb: "Little pitchers have big ears." Well, it doesn't refer to the utensil that holds water or goes to the corner side door. "Pitcher" was a slang term with some such meaning as our word "chap" or "fellow." Thus, "Little fellows have big ears" is a more sensible rendering of the proverb.

When a Judge Pleaded.

French law courts often develop phases of humor that can have no procedure. Monsieur Hugot is president of the Ninth chamber, one of the courts of Paris. The other day, Maitre C. appeared at the bar, and with many gestures, pointing to his throat, made the court understand that he had lost his voice. "Yes, maitre," said the judge sympathetically, "the court notes that you have a severe cold, that it is impossible for you to plead. But your client shall not on that account be deprived of defense. If you had been able to plead you would not have failed to show that she had a good reputation, and that she stole from her employer to nourish her four children. In short, that the accused committed a fault accidentally, and that she will engage never again to appear before the tribunal. There, Maitre C., is your pleading, is it not? Very well; now the judgment of this tribunal is one month in prison."
