Friday's beautiful weather brot out sun-bonnets, hoes and even the making of a flower bed. Mr. Ellingson was quite certain the good weather had come to stay, but Saturday caused him to think another way. Rushing the season, Was a little out of reason. On Friday so balmy and fair. When storm windows came off for the want of air. A trench was dug. And sweet peas so snug, Were tucked away in the soil with care. The saying goes, As everyone knows, That when women are out, There's a storm enroute. But this bluster and scurry. The "women" did not hurry.
