

S. P. Clark ran into some old machinery in front of Richardson's barn with his automobile and sustained a badly bent front axle. He was coming from the west and Mr. Reite from the north, and although neither car was going very fast when they arrived at the corner simultaneously a collision was avoided only by turning out off the street and by so doing Mr. Clark found it impossible to avoid the machinery. Too much care cannot be exercised in approaching corners where the view in other directions is obstructed.
