

Sentinel-Courier: — The five-year-old son of Martin Opheim narrowly escaped being killed last Thursday while sitting on the tool box of a threshing engine when the belt slipped off throwing the engine into reverse gear and made it go backwards which threw the little fellow in between the tool box and the big drive wheel of the engine. It caused a good deal of bruises about the head and ruptured both ear drums and made him cross-eyed and was unconscious for 30 hours. At present the little fellow is doing nicely. Dr. Almkov has charge of the case. This should be a good warning to all people not to let little children be about threshing outfits.
