

McHenry Tribune: Frank Barber has gone to Hannaford, where he will be employed in the Chas. Goffe garage. Barber, who was a sergeant in the recent war, was a driver of General Gibbs' personal car and was in practically every part of the war section in which American troops were, and was often under fire. Like all returned overseas men, Barber refuses to "talk army," though he doubtless could tell many interesting stories.