

Olof Edland arrived here last week from Montana, where he has been farming the past three years, to look after his interests here a short time. Mr. Edland states that the crops in Montana have been slim the years he has been out there. This year he threshed only four bushels of wheat to the acre. Flax also yielded four bushels per acre, but while the quantity was low the quality was high. The shortage of feed, he says, will cause the greatest hardship. But while conditions in Montana are less promising at present Mr. Edland is optimistic about the future of the state and says that the country will come back strong.
