

Lieutenant Reeves, of a British Machine Gun Corps, spoke in the Hall last Thursday afternoon to a large audience. The lieutenant told of his experiences at the front, narrating many humorous as well as tragic occurrences. He has been twice wounded, once shot through the chest, and once through the neck and is incapacitated for further active service. Referring to the present great offensive of the Germans Lieutenant Reeves expressed himself as firmly convinced that when the small British army at the beginning of the war was able to check the Hun hordes though greatly outnumbered, they will surely be able to hold them now when the numbers are somewhat more equal.
