

Train-loads of selective service men, who have been training in the camps on the Pacific coast, have been passing through Hannaford on the Great Northern the past week. Four trainloads passed through last Tuesday and the same number Sunday, and one or two have been passing almost every day. The troops are on their way to New York for embarkation for overseas service. Most of the trains have stopped here for a few minutes, and a train Wednesday and one Friday stopped long enough to give the boys a chance to stretch themselves. They marched in company formation through the streets, and our citizens were given an opportunity to see a company of soldiers at drill. After breaking ranks the boys were treated to cigars and ice cream before boarding the train again.
