Ways of a Rich Miser.

Jonathan Tremaine Wells, the New York straw goods merchant, who died a little more than a year ago, left property valued at more than half a million. He was a miser and of eccentric ways, and as his will did not suit an the relatives proceedings have been begun to tives proceedings have been begun to break it. A hearing was had the other day at which it was shown that Mr. Wells, though wealthy, would not have a fire in his office in cold weather. He wore two vests, one outside the other, and when it was too childy for him to endure it he would go into his next door neighbor's office and warm himself. He would never cross the ferry to Brooklyn, till alter five o'clock, the fare after that hour being only one cent. only one cent.

Quinine as a Cause of Insanity

American Medical Weekly The father of a Washington lawyer guilty of escapades, has recently given the following explanation of the erratic victim: "Thinking it a safe thing to do, my son has been in the habit for months of carrying quinine in his pocket, and tak ing it in small but frequent doses, and the result is an elated, sanguine state of mind, quite beyond the bounds of rea-son. His memory is not yet impaired, and the marked improvement consequent upon being deprived of the drug, gives his friends reason to expect complete restoration in a shorttime. Meanwhile, let this case be one of many others to teach us all that, excellent as others to teach us all that, excellent as quinine may be in many cases, it is, like chloral or opium or alcohol, exceeding dangerous to trifle with." The question which naturally arises in the mind of the physicians on reading this is, whether quinine has ever been reported as caus-ing insanity. There are at least two such cases on record, both of them reported in the Journal of Nervous and Mental Diseases, July, 1881. In both, insanity always followed upon the use of quinine, and, from the character of the two reported cases: ported cases, it seems certain that in some predisposed cases a brief, curable insanity may follow upon the use of the

The Season at Home and Abroad. From Baltimore Sun.

Everybody must acknowledge that this has been a very unusual season at home and abroad. In regard to the United States, it may be described as "very bad weather for a civilized country." Blizzards and snows at the west; rain, snow, sleet, and ice at the east. In the Middle states we have had three weeks of as disagreeable days as have been known in any winter for years. The rivers have risen in Austria, Hungary, Germany, and I aly from incessant rains and the sudden melting of the sant rains and the sudden melting of the snow, until they have swollen into floods, and caused the loss of many lives and an enormous amount of property, to the impoverishment of thousands of people. In England, as if in mockery, the winter has been altogether different. January has the balminess of April. The crocus and the daffodil are in bloom. The primrose is out on the wayrile. The violets are and in southern exposures the jassamine is displaying its yellow flowers. Buds are swelling and bursting upon the earlier leading trees, and it is feared that great damage will be done if the temperature falls and the spring frosts are
